WE THE FUTURE | GREENLINING ECONOMIC SUMMIT 2020

A VIRTUAL SUMMIT ON RACIAL EQUITY

Welcome to The Greenlining Institute's 27th annual Economic Summit! We are very grateful to you for joining us. In the past, this was our favorite time of year where we could connect, build, and reinvigorate each other to continue the challenging work of racial equity. Moving our Summit from an in-person event to a new digital platform aligned with our values of safety and the well-being of all our communities. So we dug in, redesigned and innovated our Summit to bring to you a provocative experience that still offers the connections we desire, the engagement we need, and the inspiration to fuel us for action.

This year's theme, We the Future, expresses our aspirations for a nation where all communities have the opportunity to participate in the creation of healthy, thriving, and resilient lives. To help us get there, we've pulled together a day of networking, fireside chats, thought-provoking panels, and an exciting keynote speaker to help guide us on what we must do to build purpose and build a foundation that reaches ALL communities.

We're living through a pandemic of devastating speed, scale, and severity. These impacts weigh on each of us in different ways. Meeting this moment will require all of us working together to overcome the crisis and resolve the deeper inequalities it has exposed. This Summit offers you conversations that are multi-generational, interdisciplinary and cross-cultural that can generate ideas to implement and serve as a catalyst for action. We hope you will jump into the chat rooms, ask questions, get answers, meet comrades who will sustain you and create resilience for you after the day is over.

As we ground ourselves in the present realities, my hope is that the Summit allows us to reach each other in ways that propel us forward with enthusiasm so we can continue to meet our challenging work of dismantling racial inequity and removing structural biases that impede opportunity. We will be explicit in our naming and exploring intentional actions to transform our economy and our communities while advancing a dialogue through the strength and the power of community, collective thought, collective voices and collective action.

Finally, I truly believe this gathering of some of the country's leading racial justice experts, advocates and activists has never been more critical. We are proud to create space for raw, uncut information and authentic voices from people of diverse backgrounds, all united by the common cause of advancing racial equity. May the power of our local and historical wisdom move us from the adequate to the extraordinary.

Thank you for joining us and we hope to meet you in person in the near future.

Sincerely,

Debra Gore-Mann
President and CEO

Protecting and centering the needs of the most vulnerable will be critical to mitigating the health and economic consequences of the pandemic. During this discussion we will 1) learn how the legislature is integrating health and racial equity in California's budget and policy response, and 2) discuss how direct advocacy on the timely public health intersections of immigration and decarceration issues have critical health impacts for low-income communities of color.

For our afternoon fireside chat, we will be joined by New York Times bestselling author Ibram X. Kendi. Kendi's concept of antiracism and antiracist policy has reshaped the conversation about racial justice in America. As the COVID-19 pandemic pushes policy changes at an unprecedented pace and lays bare the stark racial inequities that exist in our country, this session will explore what an antiracist society might look like and how we can play an active role in building it.

1:30 p.m. - 2:20 p.m. BREAKOUT SESSIONS: RESILIENCE AND TRANSFORMATION

The afternoon breakouts will focus on ways to bolster resilience in ourselves and our communities as we move through this crisis and focus on what is needed for long-term transformation as we build out a recovery process.

Building Resilience at the Intersection of COVID and Climate Change

In the face of climate change and COVID-19, we're seeing striking similarities in how pandemics and climate disasters hit low-income communities and communities of color the hardest, both during the immediate impacts and the subsequent economic fallout. As California begins to recover from COVID-19 and at the same time continues to prepare for climate threats, we must develop innovative and intersectional solutions that address the socioeconomic, health and environmental impacts that our frontline communities will face from both crises. This session will explore the intersection of COVID-19 and the climate crisis, and the challenges and opportunities they present to build resilience in frontline communities.

Moderated by Sona Mohnot, Senior Environmental Equity Program Manager, The Greenlining Institute
Corrine Van Hook-Turner, Director of Climate Innovation, The Movement Strategy Center
Rita Kampalath, Ph.D., P.E., Sustainability Programs Director, County of Los Angeles Chief Sustainability Office

Resilience in the Apocalypse: When the End Is a New Beginning

In this session, large-scale change expert Becky Margiotta and apocalypse expert and race, diversity, equity, and inclusion trainer and coach Susan X Jane will guide you through a series of experiential exercises designed to strengthen your resilience, develop a vision for an equitable future and clarify your intentions going forward. You will leave this session feeling rejuvenated, inspired, and having tools to help you contribute to this new beginning within ourselves, communities, and institutions.

Becky Margiotta, Principal and Owner, The Billions Institute, LLC
Susan X Jane, Principle, Navigators Consulting

Disruptive Advocates: Youth at the forefront of Social Change

With school closures and a dim financial outlook for those entering the job market, the COVID-19 crisis has presented unique challenges to young adults. Despite this, young organizers and activists continue to lead with creativity and resilience, using this moment to radically reimagine our future and drastically shift our present. This session will highlight young leaders who are playing a pivotal role in climate activism, creating economic mobility opportunities for youth, and advocacy for immigration and decarceration. Panelists will discuss: What is the future we are fighting for? And how can we get there?

Moderated by Jamileh Ebrahimi, Director of Programs and Organizing, RYSE Center
Amadeos Oyagata, Program Assistant, MyPath
Isha Clarke, Member, Youth v. Apocalypse

2:30 p.m. - 3:30 p.m. CLOSING PLENARY: REIMAGINING THE FUTURE WITH RACIAL EQUITY

With politicians and institutions responding to the economic crisis generated by COVID-19, the recovery process offers an important moment to rethink our political and economic system. This session will discuss how an equity-centered response to this crisis can not only help us recover, but create a stronger and more resilient planet and people.

ABOUT GREENLINING

Founded in 1993, The Greenlining Institute envisions a nation where communities of color thrive and race is never a barrier to economic opportunity. Because people of color will be the majority of our population by 2044, America will prosper only if communities of color prosper. Greenlining advances economic opportunity and empowerment for people of color through advocacy, community and coalition building, research, and leadership development. We work on a variety of major policy issues, from the economy to environmental policy, civic engagement and many others, because economic opportunity doesn't operate in a vacuum. Rather than seeing these issues as being in separate silos, Greenlining views them as interconnected threads in a web of opportunity.

ISSUES & IMPACT

Health Equity

Nothing is more essential than our health. Everybody should have access to good health regardless of race or income. Health care must be responsive to the nation's growing communities of color, but health care isn't enough. People also need access to the things that lead to good health such as safe neighborhoods, healthy foods, clean environments and decent jobs. Greenlining brings the voices of communities of color into critical decisions that affect all of our lives and health.

Economic Equity

The Greenlining Institute's Economic Equity program works to overcome the lingering effects of redlining, help communities of color build wealth, and ensure that our financial system works for all.

Technology Equity

Technology Equity works to make sure that people at all income levels have access to the information and communications technology that is so vital in today's economy, and to ensure that technology companies are responsive to the needs of communities of color.

Environmental Equity

The Greenlining Institute's Environmental Equity program develops policies to improve public health and environmental quality for low-income communities and communities of color while bringing "green" dollars to these communities.

Energy Equity

Energy Equity addresses the electric and gas services upon which homes and businesses depend, seeking to ensure that low-income ratepayers are protected and that race, language or income are never barriers to these essential services.

Leadership Academy

The Leadership Academy works to empower and develop the next generation of multi-ethnic leaders to advance racial and economic equity and create positive social change. We seek to develop a network of visionary leaders ready to work across racial and ethnic lines to address America's most pressing problems and develop sustainable solutions rooted in equity and justice.
